 It was a quiet night. The waves crashed upon the shore with a sutle >roar. The sky was a azure blue, with the stars twinkling like eyes, looking down upon them in a tender caring way. The wind blew her hair >lightly, sweeping it into her eyes as he leaned against the lone palm tree. Her faithful friend laid curled up like a puppy at her side.
>Stroking her fur gently, she turned her attention back to the crashing waves. Despite the trouble of it all, she couldn't get her mind into >working order. The more peaceful things got, the more tense everyone else became. She sighed inwardly, leaning against the palm tree again. She >would have to get back soon, before they started to worry. Getting up slowly, she picked up the sleeping digimon and began to walk back towards >camp. As she walked, she heard the sound of a harmonica, playing in the wind. It was sad almost, but different than usual. She walked towards the >sound.
> Staring though the bushes, she set her friend down, and proceeded to go towards the sound. Finally, after walking for the longest time, she came >upon a boy. His blond hair drooped over his closed eyes as he played

soft melody. Still, it was a little sad, a tinge of sorrow in the notes, >like something was bothering him. As the song ended, the boy leaned back onto the large roots of the tree, sighing as he tucked away the small prize >back into his pocket. The girl decided to make an appearance. "You play well." she said, walking over to him and sitting next to him. The boy >smiled with apperciation, then his smile faded as his gaze reached the stars. "The song, it was sad." The girl said, smoothing out her pink >shirt. "I miss them." he murmured quietly, his shoulders sagging a little. He sighed and let his head droop, his blond hair going over his >blue eyes once more. She brushed his hair out of his eyes and looked into them. "I miss them too." she said quietly. Suddenly, they couldn't >contain it any longer, and their lips met in a soft kiss. When the kiss broke, they hugged tightly. "I love you Kari." he said, brushing her soft >brown hair. "I love you too, TK." They stopped hugging and both looked up at the stars. "I wonder what Matt's gonna say when we get back home." TK >said smiling, his arm wrapped securly around Kari's shoulder. "I wonder what Daisuke and the others are gonna say." Kari said, returning the smile >as she leaned onto TK's shoulder. "Do we really care?" TK asked. Kari shook her head. And they stayed there until morning, together, it each >other's arms.
>The End
>I betcha thought that that was Mimi and Matt, or maybe Kari and Matt (yuk!) This took place in the second season Digimon episodes. TK and Kari >belong together! VIVA LA TKKARI ROMANCE! WOO HOO! :ahem: Anyways,
